THE PALACE OF WHITEHALL.

The above view of Whitehall, which nearly resembles that by Sylvester, but is drawn with much greater accuracy, is peculiarly interesting for the fine & very correct representation it gives of the celebrated Gateway designed by Hans Holbein, as also for exhibiting some still more curious remains of the palace, which adjoined the North east of the Banqueting Room, and which are to be found on no other view extant. — The Drawing was made in the early part of the reign of Charles I. —
